Product IDQ10610 For all of Stanley Bing's columns on TheStreet.com: click hereOut in San Francisco, where I live far too little of the time, it has been raining for about two months on and off. Sometimes it pours buckets. Other times it just sort of drips down all day in a gray haze. "I might as well be living in Seattle," my wife said to me the other day. In Los Angeles, where the climate is one of the only true reasons to reside, things are scarcely better. Several weeks ago, it rained horribly for about 10 days and was cold after that. San Francisco weather? Today, on the other side of the country, in Washington, my friend Frank is still digging out of a freak, mountainous snowfall that buried his house last week. Another 20 inches, they say, is on the way over the next couple of days. In the meantime New York, where I am right now, has received little more than a desultory dusting. In other words, Washington seems to have New York's weather. It's so bad down there, in fact, that Frank can't make it to the staff meeting, and he never misses a staff meeting. There's only one conclusion I can reach in this situation. The climate is changing in a very specific way: The weather is moving south. If what I believe to be happening is true, the implications for business are vast. The South will no longer be the land of juleps and lazy dogs sleeping in the sun. It will be cold and enterprising, filled with energetic folks rushing off to be in their warm workplaces. The Pacific Northwest, now free of its lousy weather, will stop hunkering down inside its coffeehouses, put on a tie, and get to work. Los Angeles, suddenly afflicted with Bay Area weather, will empty out almost entirely, at least of show business people. Where they will go I don't know. Boston will of course be like Canada, but that's no change for them. Aside from the six tolerable weeks in September/October each year, it always has been. And Canada? They will be even more smug about themselves than usual, because now everybody north of St. Louis has their lousy weather. The impact on New York is still unclear. It should be horrendous here right now, it being February, but its not. There's a little snow on the ground this morning, but it's not what the shrieking, screaming, sweating, gestulating, eye-bulging, doomsayers who deliver the weather on TV prognosticated. It's a little snow. We can live with it. In fact, it's one of the warmest winters I can ever remember. This global warming isn't all bad, at least when it comes time to put on your wing tips and get to the office. You can catch Stanley Bing at twitter.com/thebingblog. Home Weather Coolangatta Two-week forecast°C Hour-by-hour weather for Coolangatta next 7 daysAdvertising Media Platforms Design Team Sometimes it's good to just talk about the weather. Although, I am grateful that my strong suit is the capacity to talk about things that are deep, meaningful and complex. I can talk about the painful things of life. I'm adept at topics that are delicate and of great intensity. Good for me, but understandably not everyone wants to go there. I get it! I need to weigh my intensity level in accordance to where I am and if its required or desired. I need to bring it to certain circles and stick to the weather in places that prefer, well, to be on a lighter note. You know, "raindrops on roses and whiskers on kittens, bright copper kettles and warm woolen mittens..."My dad was given 5-6 months to live as a result of stage four lung cancer. There is no cure or treatment that will make this disappear. He has chosen to not do chemotherapy treatments. Here's the thing, he's doing okay for today and doesn't want to talk about his future. The doc says he might surpass the average lifespan. I needed to learn really quickly that while I'm capable and eager to discuss this process with him and help him access his feelings about it and able to write his bucket list and get all his affairs in order, I don't. It's not for lack of trying and going there - occasionally, but he just doesn't want to stay in that vein of conversation for any great length. Maybe two minutes, if that. I honor him and push aside the pink elephant in the room, and say, "wow, ten inches of snow in New York!"I am letting him be and talking about the simple things of life and taking my conversations about death, dying and the like elsewhere. When he's ready, he'll say what he needs to say or he will die without saying it and I will have to deal with that. In the meantime, I'm in the moment with him, feeling his alive presence and not diving too deep unless invited. I'm talking about the wood carvings he's made, looking at old photos, laughing about his childhood, listening to tales of fishing and his rigging days. In other words, keeping it light. We both know the silver lining on the clouds may be melting a bit into rain soon, but for right now we are all about the silver... and the sunny days.Media Platforms Design TeamSusan works at Prevention magazine.
